Pul the rear seats down to gain access to the boot, then with a torch you will see a small lever/switch at the bottom of the boot catch close to the floor, then if you flick this with a small screwdriver the catch will release. You will then need to replace the switch as these wear out which is a very common fault.

I went into BIOS and changed the boot order to make sure that the USB drive was listed first. I restarted the tablet but it doesn't even try to boot from the USB, it just boots like it normally does, flashes the 64%, and enters the reboot loop. I've been trying to fix this for hours and I'm not sure what to do.
