The Poetic Edda. Old Norse-speaking poets have left us countless valuable clues regarding their religious perspective, but the collection of poems known today as the "Poetic Edda" or "Elder Edda" contains the most mythologically rich and thorough of these. Two of these poems, Völuspá ("The Insight of the Seeress") and Grímnismál ("The Song of the Hooded One") are the closest things we have to systematic accounts of the pre-Christian Norse cosmology and mythology.
